Gentlemen:

I sincerely believe you have made a mistake. On September 30 and November 10, 1949 you sent me statements for $21.29, covering an order of Bach scores which I received from your address last July. I am taking the liberty of returning these statements to you. I am also contributing to your files a duplicate invoice dated 7-18-49 which shows that the charge of $21.29 was paid by a check of $22.00.

That leaves 71 cents in my favor, about which, however, I should hate to undertake an extensive correspondence. Could we compromise? If I left you the seventy-one cents, would you be good enough to stop sending me monthly statements for $21.29?

But I have even a better idea: why don't you credit the $0.71 to my account? Then when I order more books from you, I can merely deduct that amount and we shall both be happy. Would you be kind enough, ~~to~~ acknowledge this letter? At the same time could you quote the prices of volumes 5, 6, 21, and 31 of the Bach edition?

I trust the enclosed duplicate invoice (I am keeping the original just in case you keep on sending me more statements) will settle the matter. Please address any further correspondence concerning this matter to me at the above address.

Yours truly,

E. Jochen Meyer
